

BC farms out adults with intellectual disabilities on Craigslist in cost-cutting “service redesign” initiative

October 21, 2010

Below is a list of ads currently running on Craigslist, some of them offering “Free Rent!” and salary to anyone willing to share their home with one or more adults with developmental disabilities. CLBC is currently forcing disabled adults from group homes where they have lived happily in some cases for over 20 years and farming them out on Craigslist.

Unlike professionally staffed group homes, which must be licensed, inspected and subjected to independent oversight, home share contractors are not subject to any independent oversight and the potential for abuse is enormous.

Today, BC’s Advocate for Service Quality responded to growing community concerns by refusing to intervene, stating that her mandate only permits her to respond if an individual files a formal complaint. The Advocate for Service Quality answers to Minister Rich Coleman (the minister who ordered the cuts).
